- 2. The population tried to purchase and hoard all available foodstuffs. Savings accounts were depleted to buy furniture, television sets, etc. It was observed that radio sets were adjusted to receive transmissions from the Nordwestdeutschaftundfunk (Northwest German Broadcasting System) since, especially at Falkensee, reception of East German broadcasts was poor.
- 3. No coal has been available since February 1955. Raw coal was also lacking, and the persistent cold left many families without heat. Around 1590 hours, the electric voltage dropped by about 50 percent. Shuttoffs occurred at irregular intervals without previous announcement.
- 4. In March 1955, a veterinarian reported that slaughter cattle from LPG Abrentelde was rejected by the slaughter house because of its half-starved condition.
- 9. Up to early March 1995, no butter was available at HO stores of Klein Machnow near Berlin. Only small quantities of inferior-quality lard and becon were available. Rumors predicting renewed sugar rationing caused frantic buying and hoarding of sugar.
- 6. Similar rumors spread in late February regarding the flour supply. It became known that the VEAB Teltow grain silo, which has a capacity of 7,000 tons, contained only 2,000 tons of grain. This grain silo had repeatedly been filled by grain imports in recent years, but no such imports had arrived during the current year.
- 7. In early March, coal was no longer made available to the population. Coal stocks at the coal dealers were depleted and customers were told to wait will apple.
